Studies:

On arrival at St Patrick's College a student will be tested to ascertain his level of English - oral and written competency - and the level of prior learning in various subjects. This will determine a student's level of study and will help shape the programme of study chosen. The College reserves the right to adjust a student's course if the work is found to be too difficult. The subjects a student should take depend on what course he wishes to do at a University or Polytechnic or a student's career path.

A student entering the school at Year 12 or Year 13 will find there are many subjects that he cannot do unless he has previously studied them. These include languages, mathematics, physics and chemistry. It is important to remember that a competent level of English is required for all subjects.

St Patrick's College recommends that a student enrol for a minimum of 2 years. This will ensure a higher level of competency in English that will result in a better understanding of the subjects and should result in better grades.

St Patrick's College will endeavour to provide the best possible advice on what subjects a student should take in order to meet set entry criteria. Information about the New Zealand Education System can be obtained from the New Zealand Education Centre (NZEC) or New Zealand Embassy or High Commission in Kuala Lumpur, Singapore, Bangkok, Tokyo, Hong Kong, Jakarta, Seoul or Taipei.
